Ok, I think it is possible to take function argument names from `proargnames[]` text array in `pg_proc` and use them inside `plphp_compile_function` when making function php source. The question is: should we require names for each pl/php function argument, and if not - are we going to support both `$args[]` and `$name` style of accessing arguments.

I think the answer is no to the first. Arguments should be optional. We should continue to accept the `$args[]` format, but we would also support named parameters.

Changes and regression test committed to the repo, usage example is here: [<https://projects.commandprompt.com/public/plphp/wiki/Documentation#FunctionArgumentNames>]
